

CARE OF SICK BACHELORS.

Ordeals of Trained Nurses Tell of Cause of So Many Sick Men.

GOLF, DANCING AND LATE DINNERS.

"Good-natured Enough to Be Kicked!"—
A Trained Nurse Subtly to Give
Medicine, and a Story That Has a Moral. "Angell" Says He,
"Heart" Says She.

(Copyright, 1895, for The Times.)
"She is an angel disguised," murmured a poor sick fellow twining in his chair and trying to find a cool, soft spot in the mass of silk pillows that felt like coils of fire ten minutes after they were shaken up. "She is an angel disguised—and I hit her with a cane this morning!" Shamed, the fellow, sick for the first time in all his pleasure-loving life, turns his head towards the window and groans, "I'm a dog!"

He is one of the ten wealthy bachelors who have broken down this autumn under the strain of easy on both sides the ocean; and also, one of the fortunate ten who have been provided with trained nurses from the best hospitals, and have had hourly bulletins issued to society, reporting their progress to recovery. That the physicians who sent for the nurses to care for these patients abundantly understood what they had to deal with is shown by a telegram, now preserved in one of the hospitals in New York City:

"Send your most capable nurse at once. Must be able to talk, read and sing; must be good natured enough to be kicked."

Twenty sweet-faced young women wearing the cap and apron of the order of trained nurses have been kicked, sworn at and abused during the last few weeks. But for all twenty there has been the word of praise uttered by the young man in the first line of this article: "She is an angel disguised."

Trained nurses say that bachelors,

"Yes," reluctantly, for the patient scented a substitute.
"Very well," you tell you one about a patient who always interrupted me. Whenever I tried to say anything to him he always broke in with an interruption, a word, he was the rudest man I ever saw."
"I should think so!"
"Yes, he was! Fact! One day I said to him: 'If you open your mouth again I will prop it open with a stick so you can't close it all day.' And he said: 'Show me how.'"

"I got a peg just like this pencil and I put it in his mouth so, just as if he were a dog, and the minute I had his mouth fastened open he began to talk. 'I can talk this way,' he said."

"So you can't," said Angell, and down his throat he poured a spoonful of black medicine, just like that! And he swallowed it—just like that!"

"Now you go to sleep again and may-be I will tell you a story in an hour, or get Nurse Hove to tell you one. She knows how to soothe better ones than mine."

"Nurses are good enough. Stop rubbing my mouth with that wet towel. Do you think I swallow a towel every hour?"

The accommodations for the trained nurse are, in a story book, beautiful little white chambers, adjoining the sick room of the patient. In real life, in the average family, there is an accommodation at all for the nurse. She must sleep anywhere she can, and be comfortable with a blanket on the floor. Great concessions if she has a couch. But the nurse is equal to emergencies.

In the training school for nurses bed-making upon four chairs is taught. The chairs are placed facing each other, pillows placed at head and back and the nurse gets a very comfortable sleep. If she has nursed a considerable time she has brought herself a tiny alarm watch for the bosom of her dress, and this she sets to waken her at the proper minute. The place for her "bed" is right across the door of the room, and when she has difficult cases to deal with she often attaches a string to the window and to her own arm, so she will know if a sudden delirium has taken her patient to the window.

The curriculum for a trained nurse is like that of a physician, of dentist, or chemist for the first year. She attends lectures, studies drugs and knows about the action of anesthetics. Often she is the only doctor a patient in a country home will have for days at a time, if the family physician goes back to town. It is always very important that the trained nurse should understand drugs.

Her other requirements are making patients comfortable and the possession of an absolutely unruffled temper. The former includes the changing of sheets for the sick-room and what to do in emergencies like hysteria, insomnia, fever and pain. But equal in importance to all of this is tact, with a large "T."

There is a great deal of sentimental trash written about the relations of patient and nurse. Their relations are those of a feeble-minded child—as the patient temporarily is—and a firm, sensible, capable woman—nothing more, nothing less. The child may be in love with the woman, but the woman feels a great barrier of superiority to the child.

THIS RELATION.
Of the twenty nurses that have been sent to nurse sick bachelors this fall three have come back reporting proposals of marriage. Poor fellows! They have been sent to nurse a woman, and a box of flowers that had just arrived, "he begged me to stay longer. Said he couldn't eat his dinner, he knew, without me to read to him and make him forget he wasn't hungry. And when I told him that I had a call to another patient he said:

"Miss Alacia, if I can't keep you any other way I'll marry you! But you won't have me because I'm such a brute sometimes. Then I said: 'Jack, you'll stay here then.' I didn't dare to tell him I was going to take care of another man. But it is a friend of his, and he will see me the first time he goes out to make a call."

"I had a queer patient once," chatted one of the girls, for it was a social evening in a nurses' boarding-house, and all were telling experiences. "He was blind in a queer way. One eye was sightless. The pupil of his only eye was out of the long glass over his dressing table. At times it would come to the right spot and for a minute he would see in perfect focus, clear as day. Then all was darkness for him. Nothing could be done for him. As he was very wealthy he kept having consultations of physicians, and I was the nurse for the last consultation, as the doctors hoped to help him. He was wild with nervousness for days before while I was feeding him to get him in good condition."

"I saw for the first time three days ago," he said to me one day, "and I noticed you had rearranged the chairs. Will you fix the furniture so that I shall have something new to see when my eyes give me sight again for a minute?"

"An idea came across me and I stepped to the long glass over my dressing table. I placed it opposite him. By his side I stood another mirror from the next room and over his head balanced another. Between the mirrors I set tall palms. Sometimes told me he would see again soon."

No sooner had I done this and stepped back to view my work than there came an awful yell. "I can see, I can see," shouted my patient, "and you have built me a bower of flowers. Oh, God, oh, God, if it could only last!"

It was over in a minute. Sight was gone, but he talked all day about his glimpse of fairy land. Poor fellow, he had never seen into a mirror before.

The age limit for a trained nurse is thirty-five for a beginning. But nearly all do the cap and apron at eighteen, and a thirty-five is a mother of families, wives of husbands, husbands of wives and the closest of family friends, for they have in fifteen years filled every spot of responsibility in hundreds of households. Gladstone's Marriage.
The following paragraph appeared in a Cheshire, England, newspaper of the year 1839: For some time past the little town of Hawarden has been in a state of excitement in consequence of the anticipated nuptials of the two Messrs. Glynn. The eldest of Sir Stephen Glynn, Bart., M. P., who have been engaged for some time past to Lord Littleton and Mr. William Edward Gladstone. Tuesday was fixed as the date when the ceremony should take place.

At five past six in a simultaneous rising of the large assemblage, accompanied by a burst of melody from the organ, announced that the fair brides had arrived. All eyes were turned toward the door to witness the entrance of the brides and bridesmaids with the rest of the bridal party and the slow procession up to the communion table. In a few minutes all had arrived, and the imposing ceremony had commenced. At this moment the spectacle presented was an extremely interesting one. The large bridal party exhibited every elegance of costume, and the dresses of the ladies belonging to it, as well as those of many among the spectators, made up a very brilliant and attractive scene. It was as if it was by splendid sunshine. The ceremony was performed by the Honorable and Reverend G. Neville. At its conclusion the newly wedded couples and their immediate friends passed out amid the felicitations of the throng.

A Peace Hymn of the Republic.
There's a voice across the nation like a mighty ocean wave,
Borne up from the southward as the sea before the gale;
Its breath is in the screaming flag and in the flag itself,
As we go sailing on.

"Tis a voice that we remember—ere its summons soothed as now—
When it rang in battle challenge, and we answered it with our sword and bow,
With roar of gun and hiss of sword and crash of prow,
As we went sailing on.

Our hope sank, even as we saw the sun sink faint and far,
The ship of State went groping through the blinding smoke of war—
Through blackest midnight, hushing, all unheeded moon or star,
Yet sailing, sailing on.

As one who smokes the dead awake, with life blood leaping warm,
Who walked the troubled waters all unscathed, in mortal form,
We felt our Pilot's presence, with His hand upon the storm,

David Belasco has achieved a success in his new play, "The Heart of Maryland," which was last week presented in New York, at the Herald Square Theatre. The Herald, in commenting on the play, says:

"The play is not so much of a war drama as a romance. Conflict enters constantly into its action and incident—nearly every male character is a soldier; but the story itself is one of human impulse and emotion during the dark days of the war between the North and South. There is more of love, heroism, and sacrifice than of actual battle."

To be sure, some of the incidents are reminiscent of other works, but life itself is a very old story.

The production is a showy and a sensational one in a good way. Money and pains have been lavished upon it. The company which appeared in it is not only a very large one, but the leading parts are entrusted to thoroughly competent artists.

The performance was the occasion of the reappearance upon the stage of Leslie Carter, in the leading role. She was a surprise, in that she is now a very much better actress than when we last saw her. The strongest part in the play is entrusted to Mr. John Kellard. It is that of a villainous, despicable, drunkard, and Mr. Kellard succeeds in making himself thoroughly odious. Mr. Odell Williams unquestionably made the hit of the performance. His character work was artistic and jovial. His make-up alone was enough to keep the audience laughing. Albeit he acted a brute he never overdid it. Mr. Mordhaunt, Mr. Barrymore, and Mr. Scott fulfilled all requirements in the leading "thought" parts.

There was a crowded house, that insisted on numerous curtain calls.

A well-dressed man called at the Fifth Avenue Theatre one day last week and asked to see Manager J. Charles Davis.

"Mr. Davis," he said, as he struck an attitude of a playwright and a dramatist, "I am a playwright and I have a proposition to make. I saw this play 'David Garrick' the other evening and it's a bad play, sir, a bad play. There's nothing up-to-date about it. Now, if you will let me rewrite it I shall supply the deficiency and make it a success, sir, a success."

"For instance," he went on, warming to his subject, "hypnotism is all the rage now, and there is a great chance for a hypnotic scene in this piece, sir, a great chance. After the drunken scene let Garrick hypnotize old Ingot and carry off the girl!"

"Why, sir, that would be the greatest dramatic scene of the age!"
Shades of Garrick and Robertson!
In "The Masked Ball" in one scene John Drew snatches a wine-glass from Miss Maude Adams' lips and hurls it into the wings, where there is a man stationed to catch it and so prevent the broken glass being scattered about the floor.

MR. SOLSMITH RUSSELL.

HE WILL PRESENT "AN EVERYDAY MAN" AND "SHERIDAN'S RIVALS."

Nat Goodwin's "Ambition" a Success.—In the Heart of Maryland! Also Favorably Received.

There is no comedian upon the American stage who has a warmer hold upon the hearts of the public than Sol. Smith Russell. His humor is so quiet and gentle that it captivates one's risibilities before you are conscious of the silence. On Tuesday night, at the Metropolitan Music Academy, "An Everyday Man," and on Wednesday night he will be seen in Sheridan's great play, "The Rivals."

"An Everyday Man" will also be presented at the theatre on Wednesday. It is evidently Russell's intention to take Jefferson's place in "The Rivals" when that great comedian shall no longer be known to the stage. At any rate, one may be certain that Russell comes more than his own weight in gold to the theatre, approaching Jefferson in his style of acting than anyone now on the stage.

On Thursday night Digby Bell will present his new nautical opera, "Sandy and the Sea." The plot of the play is laid at Port Antonio, and it is said to be very pretty. The company is a large one and capable.

Nat Goodwin has struck another success in his new play, "Ambition." Mr. Goodwin will appear here this winter and it will be of interest to know what the northern press has to say of his new piece.

The New York Herald says: Perhaps the first and the most important thing to be said about "Ambition," a new play by Henry Guy Carlton, is that it kept the audience in the pleasantest humor throughout the evening.

Though the theme of the comedy is not at all a novel one, "The Senator" having told us a very similar story long ago, and though the first act was found to be very farcical and a trifle tedious, it was nevertheless conceded that Mr. Carlton must have been in a much happier vein when he wrote "Ambition" than when he was laboriously engaged in collecting "Butterflies" or in helping out of their troubles "That Imprudent Young Couple."

His humor in this latest instance is more spontaneous and he does not, as formerly, resort to those threadbare theatrical devices, which a man of Mr. Carlton's calibre can very easily afford to dispense with.

Mr. Goodwin, as Obadiah Beck, achieved a great popular success. I did not like that Irving wig, nor his deliberate utterance. It may be quite natural never to vary the tempo of one's speech and to avoid all emphasis, but it is not always effective. Towards the end of the second act the artist seemed to become aware of all this kind of thing. He pulled himself together and the more quickly he spoke the more distinct and convincing became his utterance. Then there was much enthusiasm, followed by the usual curtain call and the inevitable second scene.

Miss Annie Russell was sweet, demure, and melodious. She always is that, and her role calling for no display of strong emotion she was at her best.

rest and made a pleasure tour in Italy, which was followed by more concerts in London and in Holland, and then visits to Dresden and Leipzig.

At this time he was at work on his new opera, which is now complete, so his secretary said yesterday, except for the orchestration.

The season will begin, it has been announced, with an orchestral concert at the Carnegie Music Hall on Monday evening, November 4th.

Sir Henry Irving will open his engagement Tuesday night at Abbey's Theatre, New York. Macbeth will be presented.

Thomas G. Seabrooke is starting in a new play called "Baby Mine."

After appearing at the Worcester, Mass., Musical Festival recently, Miss Nellie Melba began her American tour of fifty concerts. It is said that she wears dresses and millinery which she took with her from Paris cost $20,000. During the opera season of Messrs. Abbey & Gray at the Metropolitan, Miss Melba will receive a salary of $1,000 per night.

Sister Mary Regis, a nun in the Youghal Convent, county Cork, who died recently, was famous as a designer of Irish lace, her patterns having made the Youghal lace known throughout the United Kingdom. She made the lace fan, and after being brought to the Duchess of York, and a lace founce, still kept in the convent, which was to have been presented to the same lady on her marriage to the late Duke of Clarence.
